

ANGER: Victims of disgraced surgeon Sam Eljamel used a coffin to show their anger over delays to the long-awaited public inquiry.

Coffin protest by Eljamel's victims

HOLYROOD: Campaigners air frustration at health secretary

BY JUSTIN BOWIE

Victims whose lives have been impacted by neurosurgeon Sam Eljamel gathered outside the Scottish Parliament with a coffin to show their anger over public inquiry delays.

The campaigners addressed the SNP's new health secretary Neil Gray about when they can expect progress on the proposed hearing into the former NHS Tayside employee's botched work.

Jules Rose from Kinross, who has been leading the fight, said: "I did not think we'd be back here in February doing an even bigger protest. The eldest patient that has approached me was 80. The clock's ticking. We don't have time to sit around."

Mr Gray told The Courier: "There is due process that has to be gone through. I hope we can make swift progress."

See full story on page 5